PROFILE

As a human rights researcher and practitioner with a broad international experience in gender issues, I started my career with studies and jobs in the field of law. I later integrated it with an interdisciplinary understanding of social phenomena. I combine legal, sociological, philosophical, and psychoanalytical perspectives to look at the individuals' diversity, and their relationship with the community, its institutions, rules and practices. I enjoy writing, in many different forms, and I am at ease speaking in public. My career aim is to assume a role which enables me to further my expertise, learning new skills and taking on increased responsibility.
